After Asia, Africa is the largest continent and it consists of more than thirty-five independent countries. Its northern parts have relations with Europe and Asia for many centuries but, very little was known about other parts till the middle of the last century. No wonder it was called the "Dark Continent" once. Nigeria is the large country of West Africa and it is the most thickly populated of all the African countries.

One thing that is common in our villages and which we shall miss in an African village is the cattle. In many parts of Africa, farmers cannot rear cattle on account of a kind of fly whose sting kills the cattle and causes sleeping sickness among human beings. In the absence of cattle, the farmer has to plough the fields with his hands, carry load to market and walk long distances. He may, however, keep a goat for milk, and poultry for eggs.

(i) What do you know about continent Africa? (2)

(ii) What do African farmers miss in their villages and what do they do in the absence of it? (2)

(iii) Why was Africa once called 'Dark Continent'? (2)
